

'What a Glorious Feeling'

Widely regarded as the greatest movie musical of all time, "Singin' in the Rain" celebrates its 70th anniversary this year. Starring Gene Kelly, Debbie Reynolds and Donald O'Connor, the movie premiered March 27, 1952.

- While many movie musicals are adapted from stage shows, "Singin' in the Rain" was written specifically for the screen, using songs in Arthur Freed and Nacio Herb Brown's catalog.
- The title number had already appeared in six other films before this one. The only new songs composed for the movie were "Make 'Em Laugh" and "Moses Supposes."
- Reynolds was 19 years old when she was cast and had no dance experience. She learned how to dance on set from Kelly, who also choreographed the film.
- The famous scene where Kelly splashes through rainy streets twirling an umbrella has been lovingly spoofed many times in pop culture. The drenched actor was reportedly running a high fever at the time.
- Acclaimed ballet dancer Cyd Charisse performs only in the "Broadway Melody" dream sequence and has no speaking lines, but the film made her a star.
- The cheerful "Good Morning" number ends with the movie's three stars tipping over a couch and collapsing onto it with laughter. This challenging shot took 40 takes to get right.

Going Back to the Ball Field

Even though the regular season won't begin for a few more weeks, Major League Baseball teams are now in the middle of an important annual ritual: spring training.

The tradition of spring training began in the late 1800s, when teams held organized baseball camps in New Orleans and Jacksonville. Unlike today, a baseball player's salary was not enough to support him and his family for the whole year, so many players took other jobs during the winter. Spring training helped get players back into shape.

Nowadays, most players stay fit all year long, but spring training still serves as a warmup to the season. Additionally, new players are able to try out for spots on the team, and the practices and exhibition games allow teammates to get to know each other better.

Each team has an established camp in either Arizona or Florida. The teams that train in Arizona make up the Cactus League, and Florida is home to the Grapefruit League.

Spring training games are a big draw for fans eager for the season to begin. Many people visit training camps to watch the games and get autographs from their favorite players.
