Fruitcake: Holiday Tradition or Joke?

"The worst Christmas gift is fruitcake," cracked Johnny Carson on the Tonight Show. "There is only one fruitcake in the entire world, and people keep sending it to each other, year after year."

We've all heard this and other fruitcake jokes, but the epitome of them all has to be the Great Fruitcake Toss held each year in Manitou Springs, Colorado, where people pitch them, launch them, toss them – everything but eat them. And if you don't have your own fruitcake they'll rent you one for a dollar.

Some of you may ask the question, "Does anyone really eat fruitcake?" According to one survey, less than one-third of the people admit to eating it, except in the South. It seems Southerners are a bit fonder of fruitcake – over 40 percent say they not only eat fruitcake during the holidays, but actually enjoy it.

But in spite of the surveys, it's apparent a lot of people everywhere eat fruitcake. After all, annual fruitcake sales in this country alone exceed $100 million. That's equal to more than 20 million cakes. Even the Great Fruitcake Toss can't dispose of that many cakes.

And for those of you who hate fruitcake, sit back, have a double shot of eggnog, and hope Aunt Millie doesn't give you another doorstep this year.
